Historic Cemeteries of DC

Earlier this month, DCPL members toured two historic cemeteries in Georgetown: Oak Hill Cemetery and Mount Zion/Female Union Band Society Cemetery. Attendees learned about the establishment and development of the adjacent cemeteries, preservation challenges, and how these cemeteries tell a powerful story of racial inequality and segregation in the city's past and present.

You can learn more about these two cemeteries and the District's many other historic cemeteries through the pamphlet "Gone But Not Forgotten: Cemeteries in the Nation's Capital," produced by the DC Historic Preservation Office and linked below. DC Historic Sites has a list of historically designated cemeteries and burial grounds, also linked below.

4 Vacancies on DC Historic Preservation Review Board

The 9-member DC Historic Preservation Review Board once again has 4 vacancies. DCPL is incredibly concerned, considering the importance of HPRB in helping sustain a successful local historic preservation program. Each month, the board reviews historic landmark/district nominations and proposed projects. This project design review includes assessments of major alterations, complex additions, and new construction for numerous historic landmarks and contributing properties throughout the city's many historic districts. Would you like to serve on the HPRB or do you know a good candidate? Please contact Rebecca Miller, rebecca@dcpreservation.org.
